forward in time and set events right?

My friends, Close your eyes. Picture yourself in France, in the time of the musketeers, when honor is everything. Meet the musketeers. Laugh with them; ride with them; fight for your life with them. Weep with them. It's 1638. You are there. France does not suspect the evil forces working within to shatter its apparent tranquility, to subvert France for power and gain.

Circumstances conspire to plunge the young lady, a master fencer, into the fateful position of saving France from the traitor. She cannot do it alone, but she will be a part of the battle. Feel the emotions of the musketeers as they are swept up in this battle. Can they accept a woman as an equal? Can they protect her? Should they protect her? Be careful, as you cannot stop once you begin.

For Honor selected by Green Valley High School in Henderson, NV, as the 2006 featured book for the Reading Incentive Program.

it's 1639 and Louis XIII ostensibly rules France. Louis is a weak leader with no love for the wife of his politically arranged marriage, no love for the Spanish Anne. Appearances and so-called honor are crucial. Remaining in power is paramount, always. There is absolutely no doubt in Laurel's mind—Laurel, the secret leader of France's spy network—that he would plunge France into another devastating war if he learns Anne has been kidnapped.

Hear the clash of swords. Feel the pain of their thrusts. Fight alongside the musketeers and Laurel, and find the queen; then get her out, whatever it takes and no matter the cost. God may save the queen, but who will save the heroes?

"Like James Michener, Kat Jaske understands that the best way to get readers interested in history is to bring the past to life with brilliant stories and characters." - Dave Lieber, Fort Worth Star-Telegram - Righting Time.

What would you do if you were one of those musketeers or the female leader of King Louis XIII's spy network, and these "idiots" appear, blathering on and on about the future, and history being destroyed, and villains being displaced, about deaths that shouldn't have occurred? Would you believe them? Could honor still prevail in this future? Would you go?
